Maintenance therapy at the Menopause

In treating patients with severe menopausal symptoms, large initial doses of oestrogenic hormone are sometimes indicated. In such cases parenteral therapy is often employed but it is desirable to discontinue this massive therapy and institute smaller maintenance doses as quickly as possible.

It is suggested that "Emmenin" be administered during parenteral treatment and continued in gradually diminishing strength after the injections have been stopped. The effectiveness of this orally-active oestrogen in such cases is well established.

"EMMENIN"

(ORALLY-ACTIVE OESTROGENIC PLACENTAL HORMONE)
